With nearly 20 years of experience in European health policy, public affairs and advocacy, Simone currently serves as a Policy Officer in the European Commission's Secretariat-General, Task Force on Reform and Investment (SG REFORM), where I assess, design and manage technical support projects supporting health system transformation and public health reforms across Member States. My work covers areas including HSPA, HTA, digital and integrated care, primary care, health workforce and mental health, and involves close engagement with national authorities, Commission services and international organisations such as the OECD and WHO. Previously, he spent several years in patient advocacy in rare diseases, specifically on medicines development and access, health technology assessment, pricing and reimbursement, and broader EU health policy. Earlier, I worked as a consultant advising international clients and developing advocacy strategies across a broad range of public health issues.
